World War II Ends for a Soldier

AGANA, Guam, Jan. 25 (UPD.—The Japanese Imperial Army troops who occupied Guam in World Way II were under orders never to surrender to the Americans who stormed the Pacific Island July 21, 1944. Sgt. Shoichi Yokol was faither to that command to machine the surrender to the state of the stat ful to that command for nearly 28 years.

It was a chance meeting in the fading light of dusk with two hunters that managed what the U.S. 3d Marine Division and the Army's 77th Infantry had not accomplished—the capture of Set. Yokoi.

The hunters surprised Sgt. Yokoi, 56, as he was tending a homemade shrimp trap in the Talofofo River, 20 miles outside Agana last night. Sgt. Yokoi told bow he had survived in the jungles of Guam on a diet of nuts, breadfruit, mangos, papaya, shrimp, snails rats, frogs, and an occasional wild pig. He drew the line at

Pakistan Surrender Delayed Day by U.S. Communications

By Lee Lescaze

CALCUTTA, Jan. 25 (WP).-The American government took more than 20 hours to relay from en to New Delhi the surrender. message which ended Eghting in East Pakistan last month.

No explanation for the delay, which occurred in Washington, is available here, but Indian ofilclais interpret it as evidence of America's reluctance to see Pakistan beaten by India. The delay permitted hours of additional fighting around Dacca; and in other parts of what is now Bangladesh and hours more of Indian air strikes against undefended targets.

Pakistan's commander in Decta, Lt. Gen. A.A.K. Niazi, went to the American Consulate. in Dacca at 6:30 p.m. on Dec. 14 and asked American diplomats to transmit his acceptance of Indian surender terms through America's government communications system. His message was sent to Washington marked "flash," the highest State Department priority, and confirmation that it had been received in Washington reached Dacca in less than half an hour, it is reliably understood, The Indian commander, Gen. Sam Manckshaw, received Gen. Niezi's mexage at 3 p.m. Dec. 15, Gen. Manekshaw has said (all times are Dacca time). Gen. Manekshaw ordered a halt to air strikes from 5:30 p.m. and sent back through American communications a message giving Gen. Nian radio frequencies on which to establish direct communication between Gen. Niazi's headquarters

Gen. Niszi turned to the American Consulate in Dacca for help in sending his acceptance of the surrender terms because his own radio network had been badly damaged by Indian air strikes. His message was directed to the Indian command and did not ask for American comment.

No obstacles to communication between Washington and New Delhi are known to have existed at the time and it is known that the American government's com-munications can be extremely fast under these circumstances.

Some Indian officials see the 30-hour delay as the final hostile action by the Nixon administra-tion in a series of acts resulting from what India has viewed since the Pakistan crisis began last March as an anti-Indian, pro-Pakistan U.S. foreign policy. That very well."

BELGRADE, Jan. 25 (NYT).— full decentralization and broader President Tito told the nation today that the Yugoslav Commu-nist party will undergo a major reorganization in order to forestall crises such as the one over nationalism that recently split the Republic of Croatia.

The 79-year-old Yugoslav leader, opening a party conference called to rechart political and economic policies, said, for example, that "large, cumbersome party cells of up to 1,000 members" will be replaced by "smaller, more active units."

The smaller local units, President Tito said, will enable workers to "enter into a more inten-sive party life." The larger party organizations, which were introduced here more than a decade ago, attracted "technocrats and bureaucrats," he said. "We usually had a few speaking and the rest applauding, or not applauding, with nothing further done" in the big Communist cells, he said. Other changes being introduc-ed include a tightening of the party's executive bureau. It is being reduced in size from 15 members to eight. Each member will be assigned a specific responsibility. Croat Dissent

Party officials in Belgrade watched with increasing concern last summer and fall as leaders in Croatia, the second-largest of Yugoslavia's six republics, demanded greater and greater political and economic independence. Finally, in early December, President Tito demanded the resignation of the Oroatian leaders. They were charged with failing to suppress a separatist move-ment that could have destroyed the federation. The Croatian nationalists were seen by some to have been encouraged by last year's constitutional changes emphasizing decentralization of the governmental

But party leaders have also concluded that the Croatian crisis was a product of an undisciplined party that had grown

The Key Elements

For Ending the War

This provision of the eightpoint proposal also stated that remification of Vietnam should be decided on the basis of discussions and agreements between North and South Vietnam, withont constraint and annexation from either party and without foreign interference.

6. There will be a general ceasefire throughout Indochina, to begin when the agreement to end the war is signed, and there will be no further infiltration of outside forces into any of the countries of Indochina.

7. There will be international sopervision of the military aspects of the agreement, including the cease-fire, the release of war prisoners, and the withdrawal of outside forces from Indochina.

8. There will be an international guarantee for the fundamental national rights of the Indochinese peoples, the status of all the countries in Indochina, and lasting peace there, and both sides will be willing to participate in an international conference on the Indochina problem. The President said he had taken all the steps—and more—that some of his critics have asked him to take, and be said that they had been flatly rejected or ignored by the other side. Amplifying the President's speech, the White House said that North Vietnam had made a secret new nine-point peace plan of its own and it was up to the Communists to decide if they wanted to make it public. Mr. Nixon said that, while the North Vietnamese were publicly denouncing the United States for not responding to their previous plans, the truth was that the United States entered into secret negotiations with them on possible ways to end the war.

President Nixon summarized the main points of the proposal in his speech, and the full text was released in a separate document by the White House.

The President said he making public the secret peace plan because the Vietnam Communists were exploiting the good faith of the administration and dividing the American people, and because of charges by his critics that he was doing nothing to by to end the Vietnam war.

He expressed the hope that his poblic disclosures of the new initiatives by the United States would help to break the dead-lock in the Paris peace talks. Clock Would Turn

Because some parts of the agreement could prove to be more difficult to negotiate than others, "We would be willing to begin implementing certain military aspects while negotiations continue in the implementation of other issues."

The White House said that in order to speed the negotiating process the United States had proposed secretly on Oct. 11 that after an agreement was signer with Hanoi the clock would start running on the withdrawal of all

ident Nixon tonight made a new eight-point Vietnam peace offer, including the resignation of President Nguyen Van Thieu, new elections in South Vietnam, a total withdrawal of U.S. and of all prisoners of war.

The President said the substance of his new plan, which he described as a "generous offer," had been made secretly to the West Coast ports were idle from July until early October, when the government obtained a back-to-work order. East and Gulf Coast ports were ordered back into operation in late November after a nearly two-month strike.

The West Coast ports went back on strike earlier this month after the back-to-work order expired.

Adding $400 Million for Multilateral Aid

Senate Unit Votes 40% Cut in Bilateral Aid

By Richard D. Lyons

WASHINGTON, Jan 25 (WP) The Senate Appropriations Committee today voted a '40 per-cent cut in President Nixon's request for bilateral foreign aid for the year that is more than half over.

But it voted to increase by more than $400 million the House-approved level of contributions to multilateral aid agencies such as the World Bank and United Nations Development Fund.

The House, meanwhile, by a vote of 203 to 179, gave final congressional approval to the bill authorizing the program, setting spending cellings and policy Both bills were left hanging when Congress ended its first session last month. They were held up by a fight over the Sen-ate's Mansfield amendment to end the Indochina war in six months, subect to release of prisoners. This was finally dropped.

Spending Ceilings

The authorization bill set spending ceilings for the traditional bilateral foreign economic and military aid at $2.752 billion. The House had already cut this to $2.672 billion in an appropriation bill. The Senate committee today reduced this further to $3.164 billion. The Senate bill cuts development loans to $200 million of the $635 million requested. It reduced military aid and related supporting assistance to $750 million, compared to $1.469 billion requested by the President. But the Senate committee voted nearly $100 million for the United Nations Development Fund to aid part of the bill funding programs not part of the traditional foreign aid program, the Senate committee voted $246 million in capital for the World Bank which the House omitted and $110 million more than the House voted for the Inter-American Development Bank The Senate bill contains the full $400 million anthorized in foreign military credit sales, most of which are earmarked for Israel The full $77.2 million authorized for the Peace Corps was approved by the Senate committee. The House had cut this to $68

The authorization bill carries a provision that could further tie up aid funds for the year ending June 30, unless President Nixon acts by April 30 to release about $2 billion he has impounded in funds voted for agriculture, housing and programs for health, education and welfare. However, during house debate on the anthorization bill today, Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Thomas E. Morgan, D., Pa., questioned whether this provision was enforceable. Meanwhile, the Agency for International Development today formally announced a major reorganization plan that calls for a

GENEVA, Jan. 25 (UPI).-Airlines today reached quick agreement on raising the price of regular fares on South Atlantic routes, while at the same time

Mother Saves Son by Fighting Off Submachine-Gun Armed Man

BELFAST, Jan. 25 (AP) .- A mother blocked the doorway of her home, fought off a man armed with a submachine gur, and saved her son from death at the hands of an execution squad, police said today.

The doorstep battle occured in Lurgan, southwest of Belfast, when three men, all masked and armed, knocked on the door of Gary Rogers, 19, a Protestant factory worker. His mother answered the door and instantly recognized their mission, police recounted today. Mrs. Rogers threw herself at the man with the submachine gun blocking his way. The two others, each armed with a revolver, pushed past her into the house.

They spotted young Rogers at the top of a flight of stairs and fired at him, wounding him seriously in the chest and leg. Then all three armed men fled. Mr. Rogers was reported in satisfactory condition at Lurgan Hospital today. "These men appear to have been an IRA murder squad who have failed in their task," a police spokesman said. "Gary obviously owes his life to his mother." Police were still checking possible motives for the attempted slaying. They said one possibility was that Mr. Rogers was to be called as a witness in a forthcoming court case in. volving explosives.

The three so-called protective reaction strikes one Sunday and two yesterday-raised to eight the number announced in the last three days, the most for any comparable perior since the bombing halt more than three years ago. Five of the attacks, including two announced today, have been carried out against missile sites and radar installations along the Lactian frontier where, U.S. military officials say, Hanoi has recently concentrated the bulk of its anti-sircraft missile batteries in an attempt to protect the flow of supplies through the mountain passes into Laos.

Meanwhile, Viet Cong commandos blew up a South Vietnamese military post just outside the big American base of Cam Renh Bay today. The attack killed 18 South Vietnamese militiamen and wounded a number of others.

Barbed Wire Enclosure Military sources said the Viet Cong managed to get through the barbed wire enclosure around the post across a stream from the U.S. installations and planted bundles of explosives in several buildings. Half the outpost was heavily damaged, the sources said, in-cluding a militia barracks where more than a dozen men slept.

Nixon Is Seeking $50 Billion Rise In Debt Ceiling

WASHINGTON, Jan. 25 (AP). -President Nixon is asking for a $50 billion increase in the ceiling on the national debt, to $480 billion, the House Ways and Means Committee said today.

This would be the biggest yearto-year increase since World War II in the limit on Tressury bor-

Shirley Chisholm Says She's N.J. Gets Law A Candidate for President

NEW YORK, Jan. 25 (Reuters). Shirley Chisholm, the first black woman member of Congress, today announced her candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination.

To the cheers of about 2,000 people gathered in the basement of Concord Baptist Church in the Bedford-Stuyvesant section of Brooklyn, Mrs. Chisholm, 47, said she was a candidate of the "neglected, left out, ignored and for-

"I am not the candidate of the women's movement of this country although I am a woman and I am equally proud of that. I am not the candidate of the political bosses or fat cats or special interests," the Democratic congresswoman said.

Mrs. Chisholm, who entered the House of Representatives in 1968, attacked the Nixon administraattacked the Nixon administra-tion for the continuing war in Vietnam and for the economic problems and for the "disgusting playing of divisive politics, pit-ting young against old, labor against management, North against South and black against

At a press conference following her announcement, Mrs. Chis-holm admitted that while she might not get the nomination, she would serve as a rallying point for black women and other groups so that in the "most beautiful possible bloodless revolution et the Democratic convention a ticket reflective of the forgotten groups could be achieved."

Mrs. Chisholm said she would definitely enter the primaries in Florida and North Carolina and perhaps in New York and California. She said delegate slates pledged to her will be entered in several other states including Illinois, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Iowa.

Great Expectations

President Nixon's third budget impresses ing the burden of arms-within the foresecby its size and depresses by the extent of able future. But nothing is certain as yet. its estimated deficit. Democrats, especially those of more conservative views, point to the latter with alarm, and even Republicans find Mr. Nixon's present fiscal approach in strong contrast to his earlier stance. However, what the White House rightly fears is not that Congress will trim down his budget, but that it will add to it. But that is the danger for all budgets in an election year. The voter as taxpayer seems to have less influence than the voter as recipient of government services.

This, however, is characteristic of all election-year legislation. What distinguishes this particular document is the amplitude of the expectations it represents-both directly and indirectly. Directly, Mr. Nixon hopes that his spending program will jolt the economy into greater efforts. Indirectly, the size of some items, particularly defense programs, emphasizes how much of what Mr. Nixon has begun in his first three years in office has yet to bear fruit.

This is not necessarily a criticism either of the Nixon policies or of this budget. The generation of peace for which Mr. Nixon hopes has not yet succeeded the generation of the cold war. The military capabilities of potential enemies of the United States or its allies have not yet diminished; indeed, in certain areas it is increasing. The tensions that might bring those capabilities into play have relaxed to some extent: Mr. Nixon can take credit for some of this progress, and he obviously intends to pursue courses that could bring real results-in terms of lessen-

Vietnam represents one great question mark. But there are others-in the Middle East, in the Formosa Strait, in Korea, in Europe proper, in the Mediterranean, in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. There is hope in all of these regions that the great powers can compound their differences, that the maintenance of fleets, air squadrons, armies and batteries of missiles will become less important. There is a new spirit at work at the higher levels of world military power and in the evocation of that spirit Mr. Nixon has played an innovative part.

But at no point on the global horizon have the war clouds wholly disappeared, and whatever tendency there may be toward accommodation in Washington, Moscow or Peking, events could escape the control of the powers in many disturbed regions. It is customary to think of small nations as peace-loving tools of the larger states. But the shoe is very often on the other foot. The American dilemma in Vietnam is not -whatever critics of Washington policy may say-wholly made in America, and the Soviet Union might be led by the nose into more trouble in the Middle East than it

So American defense spending will rise in the hope of a blessed decline and the deficit will grow in the hope that a growing economy will eventually pay it off. The Democrats will attack the budget as too costlyand as not spending enough; the Republicans can only pray that it will be sufficiently justified by success before November to convince the voters of its essential wisdom.

Europe of the Future

The accession to Europe's six-nation Common Market of Britain, Denmark, Norway and Ireland is likely to be remembered by history less for enlarging the European Economic Community than for accelerating its progress toward internal union and a new relationship with the outside world, especially the United States.

For most of the EEC's 13 years of life, this progress was frustrated by the problem of British entry. As long as France kept the door closed to Britain, its neighbors refused to move much beyond the customs union that, alone, had been worked out in detail in advance. The road to the future is now open and it is likely to produce many surprises. First on the agenda, in the wake of the world monetary crisis, is the creation of a European reserve fund for external purposes, a European reserve unit and, ultimately, a common European currency. Closer coordination of economic policy-in effect, economic union-will have to accompany the monetary union. Currency rates cannot remain tied together unless rates of economic growth, inflation and the swings of the business cycle are coordinated.

None of this can go very far in a 10-nation community if there must be unanimity on even minor decisions. Decision-making by weighted majority votes is likely to be the pattern of the future along with other moves in the direction of a political union, perhaps confederal in nature at the start, that increasingly will influence, if not govern, both internal and external policy. How rapidly all these will evolve into a true United States of Europe cannot be predicted, except that the new entity is likely to surprise the world by its leadership and by its speed more than by its delays.

France and Britain, long believed to be chary of surrendering sovereignty, are likely to lead the way toward integration, if only because that is the only way to make the community work. President Pompidou of France already has suggested turning management of the embryo monetary union over to an "executive body" from the start instead of waiting a decade before such a move. He has proposed—and Bonn has now endorsed-cabinet status for the permanent representatives of the 10 nations in Brussels, creating a kind of 10-nation confederate cabinet there

The British, with their parliamentary tradition, are determined to enhance rapidly the role of the European Assembly and its control over the executive institutions of the community. Direct election of its members, instead of their appointment by national parliaments, is certain before the end of the decade-and perhaps long before. And governments, in Europe, are the creation of parliaments.

This is not just the "Enropean dream." A 10-nation summit conference next fall will focus on a three-point agenda: monetary and economic union, political cooperation and relations with the United States and other countries. As of January 1973, when the new members formally enter, there will be a third superpower that will have a larger population than the United States or the Soviet Union and will produce more steel and autos, carry on more foreign trade and sail more merchant ships than either of the present superpowers.

The long, destructive, misguided debate in Washington over whether European integration any longer is in the American interest may or may not continue. But it no longer will have any importance. "Europe" now is as much a fact as France, Britain. West Germany and the other states that comprise it. The United States has no choice now but to recognize that fact, which it helped create by its far-sighted policies of the past, and to deal with it.

International Opinion

Empiricism and France

It would be ungracious now to reproach Mr. Pompidou's diplomacy for lacking the arrogance that appeared unendurable in Gen. de Gaulle. After all, the main Gaullist objectives are not betrayed, and a touch of pragmatism in the historic vision is unlikely to displease the French, since they can appraise the results obtained more easily through gentleness and wile than through sovereign intransigence.

At a time when he is once again leaving for Africa, when his emissaries are preparing to revive French diplomacy in Indochina, when an agreement was just signed in Brussels in which Mr. Pompidou, together with Mr. Heath, played a determining role, the chief of state can assert that France virtually has only friends. To be sure, this is not a flashy policy, but it insures our security better than demonstrations of strength. and opens many markets for us. -From Combat (Paris).

Malta's Tactics

The Maltese government's tactic of repeatedly raising the ante makes it difficult to reach an agreement, and Mr. Mintoff's reluctance to concede the conditions which would satisfy the needs of NATO has inevitably raised doubts about the value of an eventual settlement. It is widely admitted that the main value of the Malta base is that, so long as it is occupied by Britain in the name of NATO, its use is being denied to the Soviet Union and its Warsaw Pact allies. If Mintoff is not prepared to grant exclusive use of the island's defense facilities. he can hardly expect an outright cash payment as a pre-condition for compromising on the terms of a defense agreement.

Soviet Penetration in the Mideast

By Chaim Herzog

TEL AVIV—Recent events have only served to emphasize the ambivalent attitude of the Soviet Union toward world affairs.

The Russians have been making a determined effort to achieve a political détente with the West, which in its turn would bring about a military détente, hopefully from the West's point of view on both sides, but in fact as seen by the Russians by the Western side only. Mr. Brezhnev has cordially invited the West to taste of the Soviet wine and has indicated his desire for talks and a mutual balancing of forces in Europe. It is clear that the Russians want talks, but whether or not they intend to draw conclusions, militarily speaking, from the talks, and to reach any conclusions, is a moot point indeed. A hard look at the military developments on the ground must raise some doubts

Against this background comes the aunouncement by the government of Israel that Russian-piloted MiG-23 fighters have been carrying out reconnaissance flights along the Israeli ccast,

The significance of the Russian flights lies not so much in the fact that Russians are piloting advanced planes in the Middle East, for this is not new-they have clearly indicated to all concerned that they today accept full responsibility for the air defeuse of Egypt-but in the choice of sector for their new activity. international question mark— China There are few qualified "new China hands" and President Nixon is taking an audacious gamble when he seeks to commit Peking to a new pattern of world stability,

Nobody has the vaguest idea how that bold venture will develop but I am minded of the words of Charles de Gautle who, although no Chinese expert, was told me:

"Someone asked Chou En-lai if he did not think everything must be done to avoid the saffering caused by war. He replied that on the contrary, it was by war that hig things were achiev-ed. He said China had become what it is today as a result of invasion destruction and suffering. This philosophical attitude is very impressive and I am afraid it remains a factor in Chinese policy."

Such a system would be per-

This qualifies it as a distant cousin of the century plant, a no-tion probably seconded by those faint-hearted diners who lack the patience to strip leaf after tasty leaf in quest of the court or fond. The arid but foggy coasts plains are a favorite environment for California's cultivation of the plant-notably the seaside mesas stretching southward from San Francisco. But that is another way of saying "stretching northward from Mexico," where agaves abound.

To state that the artichoke returned to California "in significant quantities only about a quarter of a century ago" errs on the side of conservatism. They were consumed regularly at our urban family table in pre-Depression days, and they came from a very ordinary corner grocery store. Fancy tastes had certainly not invaded our staid precinct in those pallid days when beer was brewed covertly under the cellar Stairs.

It's a good thing Father didn't know about the artichoke's earlier reputation as an aphrodisize, for then we would have been deprived of that marathon munch which found its reward in mop-

The "overhang" of dollar and sterling reserves accomulated abroad over half a century of functioning of the previous system could not, however, be deducted overnight from the reserve account of the United States and the United Kingdom with the IMF. They should be retained by the fund as long-term investments, or preferably "consols," with appropriate interest earnings and exchange guarantee, and be subject only to gradual amortization as future surplu of the United States and the United Kingdom increase their reserves beyond "normal" levels.

This limitation of reserve currency balances to agreed "work-ing balances" cellings would, by itself, remove the major impediment to the balance-of-payme adjustment process. The former reserve-currency countries would no longer enjoy the "exorbitant privilege" of financing persistent deficits through the accumulation of their i.o.u.s.—sterling or dollar balances—by foreign central banks, suffer the domestic con-• Gold should be gradually sequences of a growing overvalusreserve system and returned entirely—like silver before it—to the private market. It would not be assured. however, as long as such flexibility remains purely "permissive." Surplus countries, particularly, would still be prone to resist through market interventions, an upward revaluation of their currency, depriving their firms from the advantages of an undervalued, overcompetitive exchange rate.

Suggestion The simplest suggestion to meet this problem would be to require any country whose reserves rise or fall by more than, say, 25 percent beyond their "normal" level to accept consultations with the IMF on the policy readjustments most appropriate to anrect such persistent surpluses or deficits. If these consultations failed to produce agreement the fund should be empowered, as a last resort, to prohibit-or limitany further stabilization interventions by the monetary authorities in the exchange market pushing the country's receives beyond, say, 33 percent above or below their agreed "normal" level, forced, by the market itself, to float, or crawl, to the extent ueeded to restore adjustment in the country's external transac-

Finally, the lending—or "giving-away"—power derived by the DMF from the continued expansion of reserve deposits should no longer be distributed, like manna from heaven, to all IMF members, irrespective of the policies thereby financed. It should be earmarked for the support of internationally agreed policies and objectives only. I would list among such objectives the traditional support given by IMF to programs of monetary stabilization, the restoration of balance-of-payments equilibrium and the recycling or off-setting of destabilizing capital movements. I would add the indirect financing of development programs through the purchase of international development bank loans, and even of other agreed international objectives claiming the highest priority for scarce funds in the United Nations, the World Health Organization etc.

Iran Builds Its Forces in Persian Gulf

By Marvine Howe ABOARD IRANIAN FRIGATE MILANIAN IN THE PERSIAN GULF, Jan. 25 (NYT) .- Iran is reinforcing its position as the dominant sea power in the Persian Gulf.

This is the conclusion of a small group of Swiss and Amerthe Milanian on one of its regular Gulf patrols, making calls at two of the former Arab-ruled islands recently occupied by Iranian

The 470-mile cruise from Kharg Island at the head of the galf to Bandar Abbas at the Strait of Hormuz showed that the Iranians control the key sites along the vital oil route and are building up their defenses at the entrance to the Gulf.

Oil Is Key

The security of the gulf is essential to Iran because it is the outlet for crude off from the terminal at Kharg and oil products from the important refinery at Abadan, It is equally important to Western Europe, which re-ceives 70 percent of its on supplies from the Guif countries. Tehran's plans for strengthening its forces in the Gulf after the British pullout last year was reviewed in briefings by top Iranian Navy officials Britain was responsible for the defense and foreign attains of the Arab shieklidoms in the lower Gulf from 1891, until they received their independence last year. hanians will be the transfer of the beadquarters of their Gulf fleet from Korramabahr, 45 miles upriver from the head of Bandar Abbas, at the mouth of the Gulf. Authorized navy sources said this should take place before the end of the year.

, The Tranian Navy will soon have four "ultra-rapid" frigates with wa-to-surface missiles. The frigates are now finishing trials in-England. Also, three more destroyers are being refitted in the United States, the officer disclosed. The fleet is now made up of four frigates, one destroyer refitted with surface-to-air misalles, a soundron of minesweepers, a group of patrol boats and a naval-air group with light and heavy helicopters and the world's largest squadron of bovercraft.

More Jets Navy officers stressed that they would also be getting in-creased air support at Bandar Abbes. The Iranian Air Force now is said to have 31 Phantom supersonic jets and there are plans to punchase four more squadrons of

Tombstones and Complaints at a Plush Florida Hotel

MIAMI BEACH, Jan. 25 (AP):-Guests at the plush Fontainebleau Hotel awoke yesterday and discovered that they had a graveyard in their midst. It had been installed in the hotel's rose garden over the weekend by delegates to the American Monument Association's annual convention. "We're real happy about the dis-play of our products." said George Oglesby, referring to the collection of gray, black and rose-colored marble and granite tombstones.

"But frankly, some of the people don't like it." Mr. Oglesby said the tembstones were set up in the form of a cemetery "to create a mood" for the convention. But, he said, "there are many elderly people here and they think we were point-ing at them. We never dreamed that would be the case." On the other hand, Mr. Ogleshy said, some of the guests had been so taken by the exhibit that they had inquired about purchasing some of the tombstones and "flying angels."

FASHION

Courrèges and Chanel

By Eugenia Sheppard

DARIS, Jan. 25.—Has anybody to subdue his own personality and ever told Courrèges about Madison Square Garden? It would be ideal for his next open-ing. In the meantime he settled for a whitewashed photographer's studio, half an hour's drive from the usual fashion haunts, where some 1,200 crowded into a space for 500, with no seats reserved.

Pictures of sports events were flashed on the whiteweshed walls and the goings-on included a starting gun, a low hurdle jump, a tug-of-war, a motorolke zooming across the stage and a bit of female boxing. During the show, though, the mood softened and, at the end, a dozen bare-shouldered "Gone with the Wind" ballgowns, built over ruffled crinolines, were swinging across the stage. Can you imagine Courrèges, who sterted so simple and pure, going in for crinolines? It sometimes seems as if Paris has gone completely stark, raving

None of the activity at the opening hid for a minute that the clothes were the same Cour-règes story, told in a new place and with new gags like the base-ball caps and all the emphasis

Not that it's fatal to go on showing the same thing as long as it's good Courrèges.

Some of the new things: The pleated skirts with the plaid blousons, the -vests, the shorter jackets over pants and the rows of horizontal stitching on the tops of dresses that made them fit more snugly. Many of his silhouettes have lost the cut-out paper-doll look that they were femous for.

The best scene in the show. though, was the chorus line of sweaters. All of Courrèges's sweaters fit miraculously. The new ones have white yokes and long sleeves with pastel bodies. The dancers were pastel wool pants. It's just too bad that Courrèges doesn't enlarge his knit collection to include pants, too. Chanel

Two of the best in the collection are the natural silk shantunes, one slim and the other full with a pleated skirt and blouson jacket. Both were worn with mannish little straw hats. Some of the other stars are the black suit worn with the jacket open and the double-breasted navy faille cost.

If you have tiers, prepare to wear them now. There are plenty of tiered skirts in Paris but Berthelot's evening dresses have as many tiers as a White House wedding cake and are more decorated.

Even though Berthelot insists on his own formula of wider shoulders instead of the tiny, uptight Chanel top, any number of the ladies who helped pack the opening were turning in their orders for three or four new suits as they left the salon.

The new clothes at Lanvin have personality, which is more than you can say about some of the Paris collections. By day things are punch-drunk with color, especially orange, and there are more stripes than in Sing Sing. The evening clothes are inspired by the back-to-Proust hall given by Baron and Baroness Guy de Rothschild last December in their house just outside Paris.

At the opening, Marie-Hélène de Rothschild was wearing black wool, printed in large orangered polks dots that might have come from the new collection but was actually the work of her favorite designer, Ungaro, who wrote the book when it comes to designing and mixing prints.

Jules François Crahay, Len-vin's designer, is good at it, too. "I always longed to paint, so now I paint in fabric," he said of the Lanvin prints that are 90 percent his own design. They look art nouvesu, art déco, abstract, Aztec, A few meltingly sweet ones are used

It's the only shade he detests. The rest of the collections may be drenched in white, but he uses for only a few conts and Dolman aleeves, too, make only a few appearances in the form of soft, pleated tops above wide, tight waistbands.

Evening prints are big, sheer tents or very Edwardian with puff sleeves, tucked bodies with the fullness released to make big skirts.

The shockers the photographers rushed for are the sequin mail-lots, going one step further than short shorts, worn under chiffon or taffets capes.

The collection also introduced the new Lanvin shoes that are squared off across the front with

TLORENCE (IHT) -- Except for "Carmen" and "Faust," French opers is something of a rarity in Italian opera houses, so the current revival of Saint-Saëns "Samson et Dalila" is particularly

To stage this essentially static opera, you really need an imaginative producer and designer and unfortunately, Attilio Colomnello, who performed both functions, designed a hideous basic set and clumsy costumes, all fringe and frill. His production was also not helpful, and the last act was pure disester. The Bacchanale was about as erotic as a church social, and-final anti-climax-Samson didn't even touch the two columns.

It says a great deal for the artistry of Beverly Wolff and Jon Vickers that their tasteful and vocally beautiful interpretation of the title roles triumphed over the production, which often worked actively against them,

Miss Wolff is a handsome woman, but Colonnello's murky, swkward lighting did everything to keep this fact from the audience. During most of her first aris, her face was in darkness though there was plenty of light-all too muchilluminating the set. Vickers, too, looked as well as sang the part. In excellent, heroic and moving voice, he was unmatchable in the last act, the stricken leader and the mocked lover.

The smaller roles were well sung (in French), especially the high priest of Giulio Fioravanti and the Abimelech of Franco Ventriglia, Argeo Quadri's flaccid conducting did less justice to the lush beauty of the score, but the orchestra played well. The chorus was in top form. The less said about the choreography, the better.

The other opera being given in Florence these days—and to sold-out houses—is Verdi's "Ballo in Maschera," notable for the performance of Richard Tucker, a great Florentine favorite and still an exciting singer. These Verdi performances also confirmed the gifts of the Teatro Comunale's permanent conductor, the remarkable young maestro Riccardo Muti, who felt and conveyed the immense vitality in every page of this great score.

The baritone Jan Dercksen, an unfamiliar name to Italian audiences, was a grim, dramatic, and affecting Renato and Carmen Gonzalez's Uhica was suitably spooky and musically right. Only Cristina Deutskom's Amelia left much to be desired; her cold voice is all wrong, and when she tries to be the dramatic soprano she isn't, she just sounds loud and shrill. Fiorella Mariani designed new sets and costumes (why the old Kokoschka sets, dating from 1963, had to be scrapped is a mystery), and Sandro Sequi created a generally tidy staging.

PARIS THEATER

Anouilh Takes on Another Member of Atreus'. Family

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

DARIE, Jan. 25 (IHT).—Jean Anoulth, having written an "Antigone." an "Burydice" and a "Medea," tackles Electra in his new play, "Tu Etais Si Gentil Quand Tu Etais Petit," which has opened at the Theatre Antoine.

Several Greek dramas about the house of Atreus have survived to spur playwrights to imitation. Despite the professors, a modern has occasionally surpassed an ancient. Von Hofmannathal's "Electra"

(which also serves as the libretto for the Strauss opera), with its fascinating Freudian ripples and recasting of the artion, betters the original as a dramatic spectacle. O'Neill and Giraudoux, though wanting in classic objectivity, achieved absorbing inter-pretations of the Electran Psycha.

Anoulib, an acknowledged master of theater technique, has set himself a complicated task. In a single session, he presents not a trilogy but a trio of different plays at once. His drama operates on three levels, the machinery sometimes jamming.

At stage right, a touring company, doomed to perform the tragedy forever, enacts Anouilh's paraphrase of Sophocles, the interpreters suffering schizophrenia from their perpetual duties. At stage left, the members of a provincial orchestra, engaged to play incidental music for the climactic moments, gossip about their private affairs when not sawing their instruments. At the finish, the frowsy gorgons of the band attack the actor who has impersonated Orestes because be has murdered his mother (in the play). The triple traffic of the piece checkmates itself more than once with Anoullh's ideas, like his text, lacking precision and clarity.

The best scene is that between Aegisthus, who is weary of the decayed Clytemnestra's reprimands and has grown despondent, and Orestes, the flerce avenger. In a speech that gives the play its title, Aegisthus reminds Orestes that he was a charming child and warns him that, with the mur-der, he will be transformed into a replica of his victim. He will become that most repugnant and despairing of creatures; an adult buman. It is a fine, bitter pes-sage in Anouilh's characteristic vein of black frony and it is beautifully delivered by Claude Giraud, perhaps the most underrated of younger French actors. Here, though only fleelingly, there is a flesh of the author's dramatic power. In depicting the puppers of the bandstand, musicians reminiscent of the Cherry Sisters, Anouilh has stopped to some very passé vaudeville wheezes in an effort to introduce some comic relief. The impoverished gentlewoman who plays the bess-viol (and who is played entertainingly by the incomparable Madeleine Barbulée) is constantly shocked by her vulgar colleague. This laughter-stalking device went out of fashion 40 years ago. Since then, it has been the sniffish downger who has made all the flio wisecracks and the trollop who efrects a strained ladylikeness True, the new method is a cliche. but it is an improvement of the snicker-seeking in Victorian com-

Electra is not the main role in Anoullh's version in which she appears as a nagging monomaniacal miss and not a tragic heroine. Daniele Lebrun does what she can, but it is a limiting assignment. Hervé Bellon has a better part as Orestes and endows it with occasional force. Francine Bergé's Olytemnestra in decadence has its moments and both Marcelle Ranson-Hervé and Odile Mallet as the Cherry Sisters and Hubert Deschamps as the planist score in their burlesque bits. But "Tu Etais Si Gentil Quand Tu Etais Petit" falls below the customary Anouilh par. .

Stefan Zweig's adaptation of "Volpone," though minus the gorgeous poetic imagery of Jonson is an effective piece of theater as the modern stage knows. It has even been played (by the Theater Guild) in English with great success. Jules Romains's French translation was one or the glories of Dullin's career.

Zweig softened the crusity of the wicked satire by transforming the miser Volpone's servant Mosca, into a do-gooder and by rescuing him from the slavery to which Jonson condemned him. Mosca is saved by his generous spirit, his intention of spending his master's ill-got fortune to public benefit, a note of anadronistle socialism creeping into the Renaissance scene. Yet the Zweig version acemed foolproof as an acting vehicle until Gérard Vergez took hold of it this week at the Odeon and proceeded to dismantle it.

Vergez has interrupted the concise unfolding with gaudy symbolistic dance numbers accompanied by a discothèque din. Volpone's four-poster is a glass ball, which looks like a leftover prop from Arrabal's "Le Jardin des Délices." All the plays aspects have been distorted. Jacques Charon makes a crafty Volpone and Michel Aumont's overcaricatures the senile Corbaccio violently, though under the circumstances this is permissible. But text and performances are obscured by a production that is a colossal mistake.

"L'Alboum de Zonc" at the Théatre de L'Ateller affords is rewarding evening. Zonc is a sturdy, plain Swiss mimic, clad in funereal black, who metamorphoses herself into a whining tot, an acrimenious mama, pregnant girl of trembling timidity, a mad woman, a madman, a matter-of-fact doctor, a beaming moron come to welcome a friend at a railroad station and countless other beings. Her art differs from that of such an impersonator as the late Ruth Draper in that it is curiously frantic in tone. She rushes throuh her album of sketches at a single go without an intermission. For an hour and a half, she holds the firm attention of the audience. She made her debut in Paris at La Vielle-Grille, a cafécataret that has served as a cradle for many a talent. Though her number is more at case in intimate curroundings, she held the stage bravely and commandingly last night, winning enthusiastic applause, richly de-served. Don't miss her.

The cast includes Peggy Ashcroft, Patience Collier, Shells Hancock, Angels Lambury, David Markham, Schastian Shaw and David Waller.

Belgium to Raise Corporate Taxes By 10 Percent

BRUSSELS, Jan. 25 (AP-DJ). The Belgian government plans to increase corporate income tax by 10 percent this year, Prime Minister - Gaston Eyskens an-nomiced today. Mr. Eyskens made the widelyexpected announcement in his government declaration opening the new session of parliament. He falled to give details, but an aide explained that the increase would take the form of a . surcharge un the so-called basic tax rates of 35 percent on undistributed income and 30 per-cent on distributed income.

Mr. Eyskens said the increase was being made to cover bud-getary needs and to bring Belother European countries.

A spokesman for the Belgian Federation of Industries, which has opposed the tax, said Belgian taxes are not so far out of line when considered as a proportion of gross national product. Mr. Tillinghast told newsmen the end of scheduled service to foreign countries, except on a subsidized basis, is a "real specter on the horizon."

The airline executive said he based his remarks on the assumption that current U.S. membership rules for club-type affinity charters would remain in effect, and that the CAB puts into effect its proposal to permit any non-affinity group of at least 50 persons to charter aircraft on a pro rata basis. Mr. Tillinghast said TWA was not going to sit around worrying should that happen, but like its competitors would go more heavily than ever into charter flights and forget about scheduled service, internationally.

"The number of people who would pay the premium required to support scheduled service on international routes would be the definite minority in the market," Mr. Tilling-

"If scheduled service is supported internationally only by those who have the need for regular service and the ability and willingness to pay for it, the traffic would be inadequate to cover the costs."

The CAB proposal, announced in December, would last three years from its starting time, on an experimental basis.

FTC Alleges Cereal Firms Set Up a 'Shared Monopoly'

DJ).-The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) accused the nation's four largest breakfast-cereal makers of "shared monopoly" and threatened yesterday to break them up into smaller, more com-petitive companies. The four are Kellogg, General Mills, General Foods and Quaker Oats.

In what could prove to be the most significant government anti-trust action in decades, the FIC by a three-to-two vote adopted a proposed complaint as-serting that the companies, which together account for 91 percent of the ready-to-eat cereal market, have pursued "actions or inac-tions" for at least 30 years to maintain their alleged monopoly. The allegedly filegal actions involve the introduction of a proliferation of cereal brands that are trademarked in ways that the FIC says differ only "artificially," assertedly unfair promotion methods, restrictive programs for controlling retailers' shelf space, and acquisitions of competitors. The alleged inactions are the firms' failure to challenge one another's prices and promotional programs.

Kellogg immediately accused the FTC of being against bigness. General Mills issued a statement denying any wrongdoing and retorting that the government was bringing "a test case which seeks to write new law." General Foods and Quaker Oats both asserted the industry was "extremely competitive."

Government anti-trusters, private economists and some liberal members of Congress for years have been discussing the alleged problem of shared monopolies, also known as oligopolies or concentrated industries. The FTC's case, however, marks the first

NEW YORK, Jan. 25 (NYT).— earnings reports, some continued profit-taking and big price changell this morning, rallied briskly ges in individual issues. The Dow Jones industrial Vietnam peace proposals and then moved lower again in afternoon everage ended at 894.72 with a loss of 2.10. This followed yesterday's setback of 10.62. A few analysts said that the consolidation process might carry the Dow average as low as the 875-880 area, as a fairly normal retracement following the sharp post-Thanksgiving upsurge.

The mid-day rally resulted from a White House announcement that President Nixon was preparing a "major foreign policy state-ment" to be delivered tonight on nationwide television and radio.
In Wall Street, there was conjecture that Mr. Nixon might propose a specific date for with-drawing all U.S. troops from Vietnam, in exchange for the release of American prisoners of war.

At 11:30 a.m., the Dow in-dustrials were behind by 5.72. The "Nixon speech rally" at midsession put the indicator ahead by 2.19 at 1 pm. But profit-taking and other pressures, such as worry over the slow economic recovery and the ballooning budget deficit, sent the Dow average into minus territory again by the final hour. Volume, with numerous large blocks changing hands, rose to 17.57 million shares from yester-day's 15.64 million shares. International Business Ma-chines, a strong performer in the erratic market, gained 5 1 2 to 366 after touching its former 1971-72 high at 370. The com-pany raised its quarterly cash dividend.

Levitz Furniture, still feeling the impact of an article in Bar-ron's, lost 3 to 146 after dropping 9 1/4 yesterday.

As the biggest point loser on the active list, Levitz sold as low as 141 3/4 during the session. J. J. Newberry, a retail chain with around 550 domestic outlets, moved to the top of the active list with a flourish. It bounded up 4 to 21 in response to a tender offer Ravid-American offered to buy 950,000 shares, or an estimated 49 percent of Newberry's common stock, at $23 a share. Rapid-American, which already controls a retail empire, rose 3/8 to 17 1/3. Newberry ranked as the best percentage gainer by a wide margin. The American Exchange index closed at 26.56, unchanged, but declining issues led advances 504 to 424. Volume rose to 4.87

Galbraith Sees Need Of Continued Controls

PARIS, Jan 25 (THT) .- Contimed controls on the largest American corporations and unions will be necessary to keep the economy operating smoothly, a leading U.S. economist said here John Kenneth Galbraith, long a proponent of government intervention in the economy, said that the power of big corporations and big unions has rendered orthodox economic tools almost useless in controlling inflation unless they are applied with such force that they cause severe, widespread suffering.

He said that price and wage

"controls on a couple of thousand firms and a few hundred collective bargaining contracts" would be sofficient to neutralize the effect of corporate and union power. Mr. Galbraith, speaking at an nvestment seminar sponsored by Burnham & Co. of New York, stressed that "controls do not replace" orthodox economic tools.

In addition, they noted, the vield on German railway and post office bonds is 74 to 75 percent, compared with 7.1 to 7.2 percent for comparable Japanese securities. A Daiwa Securities Co. official said investors prefer German securities because they believe

When the diagramed deal was the club queen, and South won played in a recent U.S. tourna-ment, most of the players with with the king in the closed hand. He cashed the king of diamonds and led to the ace, exposing the trump situation. If both dethe North hand opened one notrump, giving a good description of their assets and avoiding the rebid problem that would arise have been easy. If East had shown out, the declarer's situaif a one-heart opening received a one-spade response.

Sooth could then use Gerber as almost all experts do in response to no-trump bids. The artificial bids of four clubs and five clubs elicited the informa-tion that North held two aces and two kings

Most Sooth players then put their partners in seven no-trump, an excellent contract that was beaten by the diamond division, except in one case when East indiscreetly led that suit. But this South player selected seven diamonds, judging that the extra chances of success likely to exist in seven diamonds outweighed the match-point advantage of notrump. As it happened he was

NORTH

By Louis-Fernand Celine. Translated from the French by Ralph Manheim. A Seymour Lawrence book: Delacourt, 454 pp. $10.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

FOR some 40 years, Louis-Per-dinand Céline had been waging a one-man war against the world in his novels, and it is a measure of his greatness that only now, in "North," has the world begun to get the better of him, In his first and best book, Journey to the End of the Night," Céline had hardly a good word for anybody, yet you felt that he was in closer touch with the human race, with people in the depths of their souls, than any other author in this century. And though "Journey" was distilled out of disgust, the aftertaste was not sour—as it so often is with modern French novels but bitterswect. His disgust was a kind of curdled love.

His life contradicted his misanthropic posture. Quitting a lucrative and prestigious job with the Rockefeller Foundation, he became a slum doctor in Paris, something like a medical missionary, since he knew that most of his patients could not possibly pay. He knew his conracters from their bowels outwards, and he could cloak an ordinary laborer in a tragic aura fit for a king. There's an unforgettable scene in "Journey" in which a woman is bleeding to death and Céline is summoned. He sees that she must be hospitalized immediately, but first her husband must sign an authorization. Where is her husband? He is standing there in the room looking on with a dozen neighbors, showing the same awed and impersonal curlosity. Ceine asks him to sign the authorization slip, but the husband can't seem to take in the fact that he is being called on to make a life-or-death decision. The drama is too much for himhis life is too narrow to accommodate it. As Céline puts it, the husband works hard all day, it is all he can do to balance himself on his two feet. He lifts the covers and shows the husband the blood streaming between his wife's legs-the husband's face remains vague.

Hopelessly, Céline leaves for his next patient. The husband, still An opening lead in a suit other than clubs would have been less helpful but the grand slam would struggling to formulate the problem, to grasp the abstraction of still have been made. The heart the authorization slip, pursues the doctor down the stairs. He invites him into the corner café for a drink: He has never invited. to produce the coup position anyone for a drink in his life, but these are unusual circumstances. In the cafe, a little dog comes over to their table and the husband gives him a lump of sugar... In 1941, after another great novel, "Death on the Installment Plan," Celine inexplicably came out with a virulent anti-Semitic pamphlet, which was to be foilowed later by another. As in his nove's, he is not a man for half measures: The pamphlets are murderous inflammatory, impossible to imagine coming from France's greatest living novelist. To despise everyone is all right-it is not uncommon among French intellectuals-bot to narrow it down to the Jews is some thing else. Especially in 1941. No one has satisfactorily explained these pamphlets. Apolo-gists have blamed a head wound suffered in World War I, resulting, they say, in a paranoid seizure. For others, it was clear that Céline was a Nazi, in spile of the fact that he had tried to culist in the French Army for this war too, and been rejected. The truth is probably more simple and more complicated. It is likely that Coline chose the Jews to attack because they were there, they were in the air, so to speak. Also, since he was showing unmistakable paranoid symptoms-his diagust with humanity hardening into hatred-his alngling out the Jews may well have been n left-handed compliment, an ad-mission that they were more human than most. Their history had seen to that,

Céline's anti-Semilism never figured in his novels, but his paranola eventually did. "Castle to Castle," the best of his later novels, opens with a hundred-page splutter of free-floating rage before settling down into a britliant surrealistic picture of life in Germany, where Céline had been forced to fice as a nominal collaborator who was too famous to be forgiven. In "North," we find him still in Germany: The war is nearing its end, and Céline the novelist may be too. There are only flashes now of his unerring sense of the absurd in the eye of entastropire.

He is lame now, he has to walk with the help of canes—and his style limps with him. True, he isshes out with his canes—here, there, everywhere-but it's not the same Céline. He's alvays spitting out food for fear of poi-son, then leaping a thousand miles to inveigh against his publisher without even wiping his chin. His irony has a whine in it.
The humanity he knew, which infuriated him to a scabrous eloquence, is beyond recognition now and the world has outdistanced his disgust.

Ajax Against Feyenoord

An All-Dutch Soccer Final Is Possible in European Cup

terdam? What a lark! Yet it is ta definite possibility, especially tafter the draw for the March quarterfinals of the tournament, which gives both famous Dutch teams a substantial chance of making progress. Ajaz, as Johan. cruyif assures us, still has to show us what it really can do, plays England's Arsenal (which cannot use its expensive new in-side-forward Alan Ball in this round) and will hope to avenge *2 feat a couple of seasons ago in the Fairs Cup. Peyenoord will. meet Bentica of Portugal, whose best years lie behind it, in the mage of the illustrious Eusebio. Two clubs from the same country haven't contested a final, though they have met in earlier ounds notably the famous bat-iles of the early 1960s between Barcelona and Real Madrid, which provided some giorious 'oothall. It is suspected that if noth clubs get to the semifinals, they would just "happen" to be pitted against one another.

More Versatile

Ajax is not only a much more versatile and flexible side since it played Arsenal two years ago, losing 3-0, at Highbury, England, it also has far more guts. Most of the team threw in the towel the night they lost at Highbury, and none more so than the brilliant outside-left, Piet Keizer, who was so inept-that he was eventually substituted for Since Keizer plays an invaluable role alongside Cruyff, his failure was a costly and contagious one. It is surprising that the captain of Arsenal, the Scottish international Frank McLintock, should observe now, on the basis of these matches, that Cruyff is a good player when things are going well, but not otherwise. At Highbury, everything went appellingly for Ajax, yet Cruyff never stopped running and battling.

Feyencord, recently defeated by the expensive PSV team in a league match, which may have, looks much more incisive and better balanced than Benfice, though the Portuguess team is well placed to win the Portuguese League, with Artur Jorge leading the championship's goal scorers. Surprisingly, since their star center-forward, Victor Baptists, was transferred to Bentica this season, Vitoria Setubal has been splitting the customary leading pair of Benfica and Sporting, holding down second place. The Benfica manager is a determined; humorous little Englishman called Jimmy Eagan, who during the war years was a marvellous inside-left, and a ragular member of the England stack. In each case, the Italians are favored, yet what can you say about the Interna-zionale Milan defense, usually so sound and parsimonious, which recently gave away four goals at home to feeble Sampdoria?

Perhaps the best way to regard it is by remembering that only three days after the defense conand lost the San Siro Derby in

Austrian Skiing Stand Hardens Over Eligibility

SAPPORO, Japan, Jan. 25 (AP).—The president of the Austrian Skiing Federation handed in the Austrian nominations for the Olympic Winter Games here today and said that all Austrian skiers would be withdrawn if one was barred by the International Olympic Committee (IOC).

Karl Heinz Klee's statement, in an interview, meant a hardening of the Austrian position. Previously, the Austrian stand was that the entire skiing team would be withdrawn only if an Alpine skier was "unjustly" barred by the IOC for professionaliam.

Let's go back two weeks and pick up the ski caravan in Kitzbuchel, Austria, where one afternoon fourth-hand word drifted into town that Avery Brundage had said something about the ski world, Within a half-hour, Italian journalists were romping around their hotel hallway, where the Italian team was also staying, waving their arms and shouting "No games,

Miss Nelson, 18, from Lutsen, Minn., had dislocated her hip, and Miss Mittermaier suffered a concussion and a broken right wrist. Between visits from their teammates, and the friendly Canadian team, Miss Mittermaier taught Miss Nelson some Ger-man and Miss Nelson taught Miss Mittermater some English.

To help pass the time, and not think of the Olympics she would miss, every five minutes Miss Nelson turned over a miniature sand glass given to her by team-mate Patty Boydstun, or nibbled on the candy or fruit gifts. Or looked at a new outfit, given to her in the hospital by U.S. women's coach Hank Tauber, which meant she no longer was on the training squad, but a fullfledged member of the "A" team. Sure-Fire Analyst

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON.—Colley Windflow, dean of American political analysts, yielded a moment of his day. Turning from a hot typewriter, he displayed his latest analysis of the political situation.

It said that most American voters were middle class. For this reason, it went on, any candidate who did not appeal to the middle class could not be alected President. The interview then proceeded as follows:

Baker

Q-This is an astounding statement, Dean Windflow. Will you really publish it in 400 newspapers and all magazines? A-Nothing can stop me.

Q-And you really believe that the voters will elect the man who best appeals to the majority? A-I'd stake my reputation on it for years. I have written this same analysis every election ye for the past two decades at hist this stage of the journalistic campaign. Do you known what I call this stage?

Q-No. sir. What? A-I call it: "The-brilliant-exposition - of - the-obvious stage." With a series of breathtakingly perceptive demographie analyses, and a few telling ripostes. I prove beyond cavil that most American voters are middle-class.

Q-That is impressive enough, Dean. But what we all admire is the daring of your logic when you leap from the proven fact that most Americans are middle-class-to the unknowable conclusion that a candidate must appeal to the middle class if he hopes to be elected. Isn't that terribly risky?

A-Oh, I don't think so, young man. Editors have been lapping it up for years.

Q-How will you satisfy editorial hunger after you have exhausted the possibilities of writing brilliant expositions of the obvious?

A-Easily. I next go into what I call "the mid-asphalt seizure

Q-Is that when you start writing that the President has seized the middle of the road? A-Yes, although I garnish it heavily with metaphor about the opposition's futile struggle. Q-What will you write after you use up "with his usual intuitive political brilliance, the President has pre-empted the middle of the road"?

A-By that time, the opposition party will have held its convention. That's when I go into my "spark-of-hope phase." Q-By which, I take it, you mean that incisive series of analyses I see after every convention of the out-party, in which you say that the natural cohesion of this splendid old party, attained after a purifyingly healthy fight in the convention, may very well carry it to triumph in spite of the President's incredible political genius?

A-Precisely. I had come trouble with this phase after the Democratic convention of 1968, but you cannot abandon a proven winner because of a single lapse. Q-I suppose analysis must be the easiest of all between Labor

Day and Election Day? A-Oh, yes. In fact I have all my analyses for that period already written. I wrote a 20years' supply back in 1952, : 1 that I have only to send the appropriate piece to the printer on the appropriate day.

Q-Does that series include your famous pieces about voter apathy?

A-Alarming voter apathy, my boy. Alarming voter apathy. "This analyst," I write, "has seldom seen voter apathy as alarming as it is in the present cam-paign." Then there is the usual analysis of unrest in the farm belt. "Outcome Hinges on Farm Vote" and the ever popular "President Takes Off the Gloves" ar-

Q-I know it by heart. "The President has finally taken off the gloves and come out slugging." I suppose that leads you naturally into your election-eve analysis.

A.-The one that begins, "All bets are off . . ." and that, of course, leads to my post-election article explaining why there was such a huge voter turnout despite earlier evidence of alarming voter

Q-Dean Windflow, who do you think will win this year's election?

A-The President, obviously. Who is he these days? Still Elsenhower, I suppose,

This is how the Eiffel Tower looked on March 31, 1888.

How the Tower Got Its Name

By William A. Krauss

PARIS, Jan. 25 (IET).—Eighty-five years ago tomorrow morning at about 10, in a thin rain, a laborer slammed his pickax into the clayey Champ-de-Mars two dozen meters south of the Seine, and construction started on what was to be the world's tallest edifice for a time.

"So you'd think Wednesday, the 26th, would be a great day this year at the Elifel Tower," said one of the guards on windblown duty up at the second level the other afternoon, "Bands playing, eh? Anniversary flags flying? But no. you watch. Nobody much remembers, nobody much cares. People," he said, "people forget dates. They even forget it was only by good luck that the tower didn't get named Boemickhansen."

The same point was made the other morning by Ahmed Ben Smida. Mr. Ben Smide is considered a walking Hiffel Tower encyclopedia by the gardeners and the sweepers in the Champ-de-Mars. He knows all the details, such as how many rivets and how much cable were used. He's ity pension from the tower. Once he fell off it. Unconscious a former employee, and gets a full-disabil-

Mr. Ben Smids himself fell only a little way when he slipped off a girder during a paint job some years ago, but far enough to knock him unconscious for eight

"You'd think the Fiffel Tower would have cured my nasty smoking habit," he said. "I mean, eight months in a coma, eight months without a cigarette. Then one day I opened my eyes, came to, sat up in bed, and said, You wouldn't have a cigarette on you, would you, nurse?" It's a fact, as almost any guard can tell you, that the tower just missed-though by some years, of course-getting named Boenickhausen. Gustave Eiffel's grand-father came to Paris from the Rhineland and got a job as an upholsterer. His name was Boenickhausen, a good and honorable name up there in the Kifel district of Germany. But his friends in Paris found "Boenickhausen" much too complicated so they called him "Eifel," as somewhere else a man might be called "Tex." Spelling wasn't Boenickhausen's greatest strength; when he altered his name he threw in an extra "f." and it came out Eiffel.

His son grew up to be a soldier. His grandson became an engineer, despite family pressure to put him in an uocle's mustard factory in Dijon. Instead, he built bridges, cast the Statue of Liberty for designer Bartholdi, studied the Snez Canal, designed locks for the Panama Canal-and come dangerously close to losing his shirt on that last one. But the main thing was, he conceived and built the tower named Effel which is for all the world the symbol of Paris.

Guy de Manpassant, Alexander Dumas the Younger, and Charles Gounod were smong the thousands who signed petitions protesting the intention to construct "this disgrace to Paris." Residents of the Champ-de-Mars area angrily filed suits. But all to no avail. The first level was finished in March, 1888, the second, June 12 of the same year. On July 13 Gustave Eiffel gave Paris, out of his own pocket, a fireworks speciacular from the secondlevel platform- and it was a monumental success. The show was visible from just about every rooftop in the city, and 20,000 people were packed into the Champ-de-Mars. "They were dazzled and transfixed," said Mr. Ben Smida. That was the very night Parisians began to love their Effel Tower.

Not quite all Parisians, of course. There's a story, still a favorite of the tower guards, about the crusty old gentleman who lunched day after day in the first-level restaurant, obviously hating every minute of it. He snarled at the service, he grouned at the food. Half the time he sent the wine back as loathsome. One day the headwaiter stepped coldly up to the man's table. "I regret," he said, "that you despise our restaurant. Since you find it so repulsive, why do you come?"

"For one good reason," the old gentleman snapped. "Here is the only place in Paris from which I cannot see this merde of an Eiffel Tower."

Exposition

On March 31, 1889, the tower, stellar attraction of the Paris World Exposition of that year, was declared officially completed. No conveniently accessible statistic says how many millions on millions of francs the tower has raked in since then In any case, certainly several times the substantial take of that other symbol of Paris, Maurice Chevaller, who was within a few months of the same age when he died recently. When Adolf Hitler went up the tower in 1940, he bought no ticket. But he had to walk-he climbed on foot to the second-level platform because the elevators weren't running. A French workman had seen to that.

Most guidebooks report that the tower contains 2,500,000 rivets. The total weight, slightly less than 7,000 tons, everts a ground pressure of 56 pounds per square inch. On hot summer days, the tower is six inches taller than on a cold winter day. Median reading of summit elevation is 1.006 feet above ground level, and somewhat more than that above Seine level and the landing stage from which the tourist boats take off. In the strongest gale recorded since 1889, the sway at the top was five inches. But there's nothing to worry about. The tower is fully insured.

"Not more bloodthirsty." she replied, "but I do think they tend to be more self-defensive, since it took so much for there to get to a powerful position." As for American leaders, Ms. Sieinem said she felt that Sen. George McGovern is "the best white, male candidate" for President in 1972. For Mr. Nixon, she could only recommend "impeachment."
"I'm of the opinion," she said, that Richard Nixon is the most sexually insecure chief of state Police and pedestrians who chased down some Unidentified Flying Objects in Tampa, Fla., Monday night sot slightly more than they bargained for. Officers said the objects in question were first spotted drifting from fashionable Davis Island in Tampa Bay to the Hyde Park area. Snared by their pursuers, the UFOs turn-ed out to be plastle laundry bags kept airborne by small burners using sulphur to provide hot air. They also seemed to be covered with something that made every-body itch like mad," said one policeman. "All you had to do was get near the things and you started scratching."
